An Introduction to Galatians

Galatia and the Galatians
The term “Galatians” was used to describe a group of migrating Gauls (A people who lived in Europe) who in the third century B.C. moved across Europe into Asia Minor, modern Turkey. After the death of the last king of the Galatian tribes, King Amyntus, the Romans formed the province of Galatia by adding to the original northern territory of the Galatians the regions of Pisidia, Lycaonia and part of eastern Phyrgia.

Most scholars who have studied the book of Galatians believe that the apostle Paul, the author of the book, used the term “Galatia” to refer to the Roman province rather than to the Galatian tribe or race.

During the life of Paul, the province of Galatia would have included the city of Antioch in Pisidia as well as the cities of Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe of Lycaonia.

The Churches of Galatia
The apostle Paul preached the gospel and established churches in Antioch of Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra and Derbe during his first preaching trip (Acts 13-14). Both his second preaching trip and the third began with visits to the churches of this region (Acts 16:1-6; 18:23).

The Date and Place of Writing
We do not know any definite date on which this book was written. We also do not know any place from which it was written. Since the apostle Paul referred in Galatians 4:13 to the “first time” he visited the Galatians, it seems to indicate that he had already visited them at least twice.
If his second visit is the one found in Acts 16:1-6, this book must have been written during or after his second preaching trip.

Because we do not know when or where this book was written, many people have given several different opinions about it. Some place its writing during the latter part of the apostle Paul’s second trip from either Macedonia or Corinth. Others place it at Antioch in Syria between his second or third trips. Still others place it on his third trip between the time he wrote the books of Second Corinthians and Romans.

Why This Book Was Written

Though the time and place of the writing of the book of Galatians may be uncertain, the purpose of its writing is clear. This book is a hard-hitting attack against some false teachers who were causing trouble in the Galatian churches. They were trying to get the Christians in those churches to obey the old law, the law of Moses. In trying to bring the Galatian Christians under the old law, these false teachers had evidently attacked both the apostle Paul and the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In this book, the apostle Paul replies to those attacks. He defends his authority as an apostle. He says that salvation is not in keeping the old law but by faith in Jesus.

The theme of this book is clearly stated in Galatians 2:16—“knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law but by faith in Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Christ Jesus, that we might be justified by faith in Christ and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law no flesh shall be justified.”
